SAVANNAH, November 22.

By Captain M'Lean, who arrived here on Saturday last from Antigua, we have advice, that a horrid massacre happened there on the 26th of last month; he was then off St. Eustatius, where he said, he had been on the Daviz Island of St. John, where he learnt that all the shipping at St. Crok were driven off, except one brig that was left, and that a great many houses and other buildings were thrown down, and numbers of trees hew down; and that the furor cases the之事。We are informed that the horrid case had done considerable damage at Torrolo, and think it must have been severely felt at St. Christopher.

On Tuesday last Captain Tocker arrived here in eight days from Tortuga. Two days before he left, a ship came in from Jamaica, who had brought accounts published in that island, that the last ship of war had arrived from England after the 20th of November. When Mr. Pryor or Pory had entered the territories of the St. [illegible] Province, and the large warlike preparations were making in England, that a fleet of British men of war was cruising in the English Channel; that there had been a veryrecent practice in England, that a promotion of Admirals had taken place; that on the arrival of the last, all the ships of war in English Harbours were immediately fitted for sea; and that the last remained only a day or two at Antigua, and then anchored at Jamaica.

About ten days ago, a boy named Kirkland was killed and scalped by the Indians, at Nattie's creek, on the south side of Great Ogeechee, Effingham county.

AUGUSTA, Dec. 1.

Congress has appointed his Excellency Andrew St. Clair, Esq., now President of Congress, to be Governor of the Territory of the United States, with a salary of one thousand dollars per annum, and to exercise the office of Superintendent of Indian Affairs, and to receive and pay and disburse all the revenues of the same, amounting to about two thousand dollars per annum. The Senate also appointed Winthrop Sewall, Esq., to be Secretary to the Governor, with a salary of four hundred dollars per annum.

The following account of a murder was lately committed by a widow woman [illegible] a young woman who has since proved himself to be her only son, and who had been absent from her for many years—it appears, that after having visited his father, until the groups were divided, he, had, by his industry and economy, raised a fund of money, with which he was defassa of paying his mother a visit, and by his presence and affability, to render the remainder of her days easy and comfortable. Upon his arrival in the island, where he had intended to remain, it was agreed between him and his former acquaintances, that he should procure a flattering search in search of quarters for the night, in order to discover whether his mother would recoft him, as well as to guard against the effects which unforeseen circumstances might raise her. According to the evening, he applied for her, but to no purpose, until, as his last resource, he informed her, that he had a large fund of money with him, which he did not wish to risk, by being on the road at a late hour, or judging at a public house, and of which he advised the would take charge. At this unfor- tunate moment, the Damon, Avarice, appears to have taken full possession of his mind, and to have forgotten the most evident duty of making the golden prize her own, means almost too horrible to recant. She, therefore, as it overperfuaded, was determined to himself, and the evening was spent, without any discovery on her part, he was lodged in a room to which he had access; and whose habitations are without a doubt, and security, and unobservant of his approaching fate, the murdered him by cutting his throat from ear to ear. The next morning, his companions, according to their agreement on their first meeting, went to visit him. He was left by the night, the day, his mother to the memory of such misfortunes, the despondency of his only son, and the death of himself; the deniers that such a fate had been there, upon which they declared there been, and that she had her own son. From a change in her course, and her still lingering that no parent had been there, the young man externalized. Some few hours, and he was searching the house, which, being done, and some traces of blood being discovered, they were about the cause of it, and from the horror that appeared to feel her, and her effusive answers, they were far convinced in their abilities of having much mor- dered her son, that they took her to court, and she is now waiting her doom. She has since made a confession of the crime, the money recovered, and her son's body has been found where the murder was committed.

It is a fact (a London Fridge) that the celebrated poet, Mr. Hayley, was lately robbed on the common of more than thirty guineas. The footprint, we hear, was that of a poor devil a few shillings in a particular exigence! Mr. Hayley suffered the fellow how he had no money to spare. Then, by John, you said (or else you must swear upon this loaded pistol that you were the man, or, and that but the truth Mr. Hayley. Upon saying this, he promised his poem, and obliged Mr. H. to del- iver up his parole. In the annals of the English history there is not an instance of a son of the Muses to be robbed of so considerable a fund. The thief has since been apprehended, and is to have his trial next session. It is thought they will cry the foole, as being thought it worth his while to attempt robbery upon a poet.
