From Northern Virginia.

The artillery of the enemy continued to have the same9 escription the country. They were at the same time more disposed to increase their numbers. It is impossible to say how many of our forces were engaged, but there was a considerable force of the enemy, which was divided into two parts. The one was under General Scott, and the other under General Hooker. The latter had the advantage of the former, and made a successful attack on the left wing of the Union army, near the town of Gordonsville, and drove them back with a loss of about 2500 men.

The cavalry under General Logan, on the right wing of the Union army, charged the enemy's cavalry, and drove them back with a loss of about 1000 men. The loss of the Union army was estimated at 5000 men.

The enemy were driven back to the town of Gordonsville, and the Union army took possession of the town. The Union army was conducted by Generals Hooker and Meade, and was composed of about 50,000 men. The enemy were driven back to the town of Gordonsville, and the Union army took possession of the town. The Union army was composed of about 50,000 men.