Public attention is now being directed to the proper care of birds. There has been an unusual amount of interest in the welfare of the birds, both by the public and by the government. In each year, numerous complaints are received by the authorities, and efforts are made to improve the conditions of the birds. The measures taken by the government include the establishment of nature reserves, the prohibition of hunting, and the promotion of educational programs to raise awareness about the importance of bird conservation.

1776. The establishment of the Continental Congress in Philadelphia marked a significant milestone in American history. It was a body of representatives from the thirteen American colonies who met to discuss issues related to taxation, representation, and the possibility of a war for independence. The Congress was the first step towards the formation of the United States of America. The initial meeting was held in Carpenters' Hall on September 5, 1774. The first session lasted until July 2, 1775. The delegates were the delegates to the First Continental Congress, and they were chosen by each colony to represent their interests. The Congress was dissolved after the signing of the Treaty of Paris in 1783, but it laid the foundation for the future United States. It is a symbol of the birth of a new nation, a nation that would eventually become one of the most powerful in the world.
